

Profile

I 'm Maral Askarova, a teacher of Azerbaijani language and literature, a philologist, and a researcher. I graduated from the Faculty of Philology at Baku State University, completed my master's degree in Turkey, and I am currently pursuing doctoral studies. My academic work mainly focuses on the historical development of the Azerbaijani language and linguistic research. During my master's studies, I specialized in Old Azerbaijani script. In both my master's and doctoral studies, I have worked with manuscripts. I believe that Azerbaijani manuscripts have not been sufficiently studied in academic research. I am capable of teaching courses related to this field at higher education institutions. As an academic researcher, I am engaged both in scientific studies and in pedagogical activity. I possess theoretical knowledge and professional methodological training in teaching Azerbaijani and Turkish languages. My goal is to contribute to the scholarly study, development, and international recognition of the Azerbaijani language.
