Course outline	Motivation is a multifaceted psychological construct that encompasses underlying processes that initiate, direct, and maintain human behavior. Emotions are complex and multidimensional and consist of neural, response systems, and a feeling state/process that motivates and organizes cognition and action. This course looks at emotion and motivation from a range of angles, such as psychological, social, and physiological, and helps students to understand the nature of motivation and emotion, their causes, the conditions that affect them, and how motivational and emotional processes lead to productive outcomes such as learning, performance, and well-being.
Course objectives	<ul> <li>Provide students with a broad overview and general understanding of the major theoretical perspectives within the fields of motivation and emotion.</li> <li>Help students to understand the complex world of motivation and emotion through different aspects.</li> <li>Help students to apply theories and research on motivation and emotion across a variety of contexts, including in their lives.</li> </ul>
Learning Outcomes	<ul> <li>By the end of the semester, students will be able to:</li> <li>Evaluate and analyze theories of motivation and emotion.</li> <li>Describe the dynamic relationships between motivation, emotion, and human behavior.</li> <li>Critique and apply theories of motivation and emotion to a variety of contexts.</li> </ul>
